

Editorial Note

The editorial board wishes to record its appreciation of the welcoming responses to the resumption of the Hardy-Ramanujan Journal (HRJ), and is thankful to the various authors for their enthusiastic contributions. Soon after the publication of the combined volume 34 & 35 of HRJ in August 2013, we received a type-written manuscript of an autobiographical nature that Late Professor K Ramachandra had written when he turned 55; it appears to be the text of a talk he gave somewhere that we are unable to ascertain. Since he mentions, among other things, the events culminating in the genesis of HRJ, the editors felt it appropriate to include the particular article in the current issue. We publish it here since it clearly has some historical value.
